INTRODUCTION

THE FOUNDATION in its broadest sense is an instrument for contributing private wealth to public purpose. The term includes both charitable trusts and corporations, of all sizes, and with wide variety in organization and program. Unfortunately, some organizations devoted primarily to fund-raising, propaganda, or subsidized research have also assumed the prestigeful name "foundation," to which they can show no legitimate claim. For purposes of this Directory we accepted a definition earlier presented:

> A foundation may be defined as a nongovernmental, nonprofit organization having a principal fund of its own, managed by its own trustees or directors, and established to maintain or aid social, educational, charitable, religious, or other activities serving the common welfare.[1]

Acting under this definition, the Directory excludes "foundations" which make a general appeal to the public for funds; which act as trade associations for industrial or other special groups; which are restricted by charter solely to aiding one or several named institutions; or which function as endowments set up for special purposes within colleges, churches, or other organizations and are governed by the trustees of the parent institution. It also excludes small foundations (one of these reported total assets of 26 cents), defining as "very small" those foundations that neither possessed assets of $50,000 nor had made grants of at least $10,000 in the latest year of record.

For all other foundations in the United States the Directory presents, so far as available, information concerning the legal name of the foundation, the present address, the names of the donor, officers, and trustees; the amount of assets, the expenditures and grants for the most recent year, and a statement outlining general purposes, present fields of interest, and any specific limitations. Appropriate information was obtained from answers to questionnaires, from letters and personal inquiries, from public records in offices of the district directors of Internal Revenue and state registries of philanthropic agencies, from published reports, newspaper clippings, and other sources. This information was recorded and submitted to each foundation in galley proof, with a request for correction, if in order, and for amplification and up-dating of all information.[2]

We recognized that some foundations would prefer anonymity, and would not supply any information. For this position they may have cogent reasons, including the fear that listing will increase the flood of appeals, which they are ill-equipped to handle. However, the fact is that anonymity is already impossible; by federal law the information returns of all tax-exempt foundations are open to public inspection, and address lists are on sale by commercial organizations. Under these circumstances an adequate description, including geographical and other limitation, may reduce—though it will not eliminate—the inappropriate appeals foundations receive.

Other considerations may be even more important. Foundations and charitable trusts receive from society certain privileges, of which tax exemption is the most tangible. In return for such solid benefits, and also in view of the fact that the ultimate beneficiary is society itself, however particularly the gift may be directed, it seems wholly proper that the foundation should account for its stewardship. The availability of the social asset should be known. Operations of the exempt organization should be fully disclosed, and, if it is of substantial size, regularly and publicly reported. Such disclosure may be all that is necessary in the public interest. But unless wide voluntary cooperation is secured for this degree of accountability, controls may be imposed by government that will limit, and may destroy, the very freedom which has made foundations so significant a factor in pioneering research and social progress.

Nearly all the larger foundations, and many smaller ones, accept this responsibility for reporting, and their cooperation with the directory project has been excellent. But a substantial group remain that refused information, or did not reply. Concerning these we have supplied such information as is publicly available, hoping for more cooperation in the future.

The Number of Foundations

Foundations in the Center records total approximately 12,000. The Foundation Directory, Edition I includes 5,202 of these; the remainder are very small, or fall within one of the excluded categories.

Historical statistics on foundation formation are incomplete. A series of directories published by Russell Sage Foundation included data on 27 foundations in 1915, 185 in 1930, 505 in 1946. Various editions of American Foundations and Their Fields, initiated by the Twentieth Century Fund, continued by Raymond Rich Associates, and with the final 1955 volume published by American Foundations Information Service, reported on 122 foundations in 1931, 188 in 1938, 899 in 1948, and 4,164 in 1955. The last-named directory was the only one of the series that had the benefit of the 1950 federal legislation which opened records of foundations to public inspection. Numerical comparisons with earlier data are therefore not valid.

One clue to recent numerical growth could be gained by using comparable criteria for the two most recent directories. Of the total of 4,164 foundations appearing in American Foundations and Their Fields, VII, 1,596 had neither reported assets of $50,000 nor grants of at least $10,000; therefore the remaining 2,568 are comparable with the 5,202 similarly screened foundations in the present Directory, suggesting a substantially doubled number in about five years.

The Internal Revenue Bulletin presently issues once a month a list of organizations, including the new foundations, contributions to which are deductible under Section 170 of the Internal Revenue Code. Such listings average about 1,200 organizations a year that appear to be foundations; but most are small, and probably many will not long survive.

In view of the number and character of present gestation, it is questionable whether a mere numerical tabulation has value. What may be more significant is the period of origin of foundations that have both survived to the present and possess assets of at least modest size. Table 1 presents, by year, the number and combined assets of all foundations in the Directory with present assets of $1 million or more, a total of 757 foundations.

Chart I. NUMBER AND PRESENT ASSETS OF 743 FOUNDATIONS THAT POSSESS ASSETS OF $1,000,000 OR MORE, BY PERIOD OF ORIGIN

Chart I, grouping this information by five-year intervals, demonstrates the tremendous growth, numerically, in foundation formation in recent years. Indeed, it probably understates this case. Many newly formed foundations, presently small, will later join the tabulated group as their assets increase by yearly gifts or at the death of the donor; only a few older foundations are likely to leave the group through liquidation.

The wider bars show the assets presently held by foundations originating in the whole period through 1900, and in each of the five-year intervals, 1901 through 1955. A more useful figure would have been the amount of new money actually given during each period, whether in setting up new or increasing the assets of established foundations. Only fragments of this information exist. But the chart does indicate the periods during which foundations were established that have remained, or have become, important from the financial aspect. As with numbers, it undoubtedly understates the case for recent years. At least two foundations, established in 1942 and in 1947 respectively, are about to receive estate settlements reported to be in the multiple hundreds of millions.

One other bias in the chart should be noted. The tremendous bulge in the record for 1936–1940, which in fact was still a depressed period when large funds were not given to foundations, is due almost entirely to the founding in 1936 of The Ford Foundation, which initially received only $25,000; but its present assets of $3,316 million account for more than three quarters of the skyrocketing record of that half decade.

Somewhat similarly, the extraordinary assets record for 1911–1915 is chiefly a result of the founding in that period of both The Rockefeller Foundation (now $648 million) and Carnegie Corporation of New York ($261 million).

After allowances are made for the effects upon a few periods of inclusion of presently extraordinarily large foundations, general trends may be discerned. In the first quarter-century, foundations increased only slowly in number; among these were a few giants, and the general practice looked toward substantial initial endowment rather than setting up a foundation with a small corpus as an instrument for annual giving, and possibly as a recipient for a substantial final bequest. In the second quarter-century the numbers of foundations that achieved at least modest size increased tremendously, particularly after 1941. This numerical increase shows no signs of abatement, though it is too early accurately to appraise the trends since 1950.

Assets and Expenditures of Foundations

Table 2 is in many respects the statistical summary of the whole Directory. It includes, by states (with a separate entry for New York City because of the extraordinary number of foundations there domiciled), data on assets, total expenditures, and grants of the foundations represented in the book. Since information on all three items was not always available, the number of foundations reporting each item is also indicated. The year covered varies, but is usually a calendar or fiscal year ended in 1956, 1957, or 1958; occasionally it has been necessary to use earlier data, and 8 per cent of the entries are for 1959. Precise dates are given in the reports of individual foundations in the directory section.

Assets. Market value of assets has been used where this figure was available; although it is subject to considerable fluctuation where a substantial proportion of assets is in common stock, it is usually much more realistic than a ledger figure. In some cases "assets" would be misleading; a few foundations have substantial liabilities, as when assets include a heavily mortgaged building. Where liabilities exceed 10 per cent of assets (we do not regard unpaid grants as a "liability" in this sense), we report "net worth" in place of assets. In a very few instances where asset data were not available but accumulated income, supported by other evidence, seemed to approximate assets, this figure was reported.

As the table indicates, assets for the 5,113 foundations reporting this item totaled $11,518,019,000. A sampling study of nearly seven thousand foundations too small for inclusion in the Directory suggested average assets of about $13,660. (The median was under $10,000.) Total assets of the seven thousand minimal-size foundations are therefore in the neighborhood of $95 million. This is an inconsiderable addition to the grand total; any one of the eleven largest foundations has assets greater than all seven thousand small foundations.

One of the outstanding facts concerning foundation assets is the degree of their concentration in a small number of larger foundations. Ten foundations presently report assets exceeding $100 million each. In order of size, at estimated market value of assets, they are:

	Assets (millions)
Ford Foundation	$3,316
Rockefeller Foundation	648
Duke Endowment	414
Hartford (John A.) Foundation	414
Carnegie Corporation of New York	261
Kellogg (W. K.) Foundation	215
Sloan (Alfred P.) Foundation	176
Lilly Endowment	157
Commonwealth Fund	119
Danforth Foundation	110

In view of the widely held but quite mistaken opinion that large foundations could not arise under the economic climate of recent years, it is worth noting that in a similar tabulation for 1937[1] only four of these ten foundations were listed, and only two of them had assets exceeding $100 million.

[1] American Foundations and Their Fields, IV. Raymond Rich Associates, New York, 1939, p. 22.

Still more striking, of the twenty-five largest foundations in this Directory, only eight were listed at all in 1937.

It is probable that several other foundations will move up into the "over $100 million" group upon the settlement of estates now pending. But the ten foundations listed above have combined assets totaling $5,830 million, or 51 per cent of the estimated total for all American foundations. Seven of the ten largest foundations have their principal office in New York City; one each in Indiana, Michigan, and Missouri.

Because of this notably high concentration of assets—and to a slightly less degree, expenditures and grants—in the big foundations, it may be useful to examine separately the data for "larger foundations," defined as those presently reporting assets of $10 million or more. As Table 3 indicates, they number 129, with assets of $8,812 million, or 76.5 per cent of the assets of all the tabulated foundations. They are found in 21 states and the District of Columbia.

Expenditures. The term "expenditures" was designed to cover all disbursements during the year of record, whether for grants, for a foundation's own program if such were conducted, or for administration. We did not include among expenditures, however, ledger transfers such as oil depletion allowances or income in other forms transferred to capital, where these items could be identified.

A total of 5,143 foundations reported expenditures, which amounted to $686 million. While the 5,113 foundations reporting assets of $11.5 billion are in a few cases not identical with the foundations reporting expenditures, the exceptions are not statistically significant; expenditures of foundations presently represent approximately 6 per cent of their current assets.

This averaged figure of 6 per cent must not be taken, however, as a rule-of-thumb or a "proper" ratio for particular foundations or foundation groups. It is a composite of many factors. Under the older dispensation, expenditures often approximated investment income. Presently, many of the newer family and company-sponsored foundations are channels for current giving, with expenditures in any particular year representing chiefly new gifts rather than income from corpus. Even perpetuities which endeavor to spend their income annually are apt to under- or over-spend in particular years. A very few foundations accumulate some or even all of their income, either with Treasury approval of such accumulation toward particular projects or because accumulation provisions were written into their charters before enactment of the 1950 Internal Revenue Act denying exemption to organizations indulging in "unreasonable" accumulation.

Expenditures from capital tend to raise this ratio. One example, which greatly affected the rate for a whole state, is the Leonard C. Hanna, Jr. Fund in Ohio, which in 1959 had expenditures of $22,739,124—which is almost precisely half the expenditures of all 348 Ohio foundations.

Grants were of course the principal part of expenditures, totaling $626 million for 5,108 foundations. In some instances, as noted in the report of the individual foundation in the directory section, the grants figure included direct operation where this was a part of the program. We tried not to include disbursements for student loans where these were handled on a business basis, with substantial interest charges and expectation of full repayment. Grants for these foundations represented 5.4 per cent of the total reported assets.

The difference between expenditures and grants, amounting to $61 million, does not wholly represent administrative costs, even if one defines administration broadly enough to include not only salaries, rent, office furnishings and maintenance, travel, and printing expenses, but also legal, accounting, and auditing services, custody of securities, and financial advice. In not a few instances expenditures also include such items as repair of buildings rented for profit or otherwise related wholly to production of income rather than philanthropic program. Reliable data on administrative costs can be obtained only by study of the detailed reports of individual foundations.

Geographical Distribution

All studies have indicated a heavy concentration of American foundations in the industrial East, and particularly in New York State and City, and this concentration holds for both numbers and wealth. The present study reflects substantial growth of foundations in other states and regions, particularly in numbers; but because of the location of most of the very large foundations in New York City, a high concentration of assets in New York still prevails. Tables 4 and 5 present data for selected areas from several studies, comparing numbers and assets.

Table 4 indicates a considerable shift in foundation concentration, so far as numbers are concerned. Whereas in 1930 nearly half (48 per cent) of the listed foundations were located in New York State and over three quarters of them in the six industrialized states of New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Ohio, Michigan, and Illinois, by 1959 New York had only 26 per cent of the foundations, and New York with the five other named states a total of 56 per cent. The number of recorded foundations had increased in California from 3 to 287; in Texas, from none to 217. These are the most notable increases.

Some of this apparent growth is, of course, no more than improvement in reportage. For example, of the 287 foundations listed in California in the present Directory, 12 were organized by 1930, an additional 45 in the period 1931 through 1944, 190 more in the period 1945 through 1954, 24 from 1955 to the present; and for 16, the date of organization is unknown. The earlier surveys were clearly inadequate in reportage, though some of the difference is due to transfer to California of offices originally set up in other states.

Geographical concentration of assets is even more severe. In the 1930 survey New York State accounted for 80 per cent of total foundation assets. With the addition of the District of Columbia, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Michigan, 95 per cent were included. The New York proportion dropped to just more than half in the 1944 and 1954 surveys, and the five named jurisdictions claimed 84 and 75 per cent in the respective later surveys. In the present Directory New York is up to 64 per cent, and the five areas, 77 per cent. However, most of the change between the 1954 and 1959 figures is not a shift in actual wealth, but in accounting procedures affecting one very large foundation. In the 1954 survey The Ford Foundation's assets were stated at a ledger value of $493 million, there then being no market value for its principal holding, the stock of the Ford Motor Company. In the current survey its assets are given as $3,316 million at market value, the more realistic figure. If the previous ledger value of $9 per share were taken, assets of The Ford Foundation would be reduced by almost precisely $2.5 billion; from this cause alone the assets of all foundations would be reduced to $9 billion, and the New York State portion would drop to 54 per cent.

Although by any accounting New York holds a high percentage of both the headquarters and assets of American foundations, this does not imply that all or most of this wealth is devoted to local projects. Nearly all of the large foundations make grants and support activities throughout the United States, and some of them internationally. Foundations in the less industrialized sections are increasing in numbers and wealth, and most of them concentrate their programs within their regions. In some jurisdictions legislation, we think mistakenly, denies tax exemption to charitable bequests unless the income is spent wholly within the given state.

Types of Foundations

Even with the exclusions from this Directory already noted, foundations present an almost infinite variety. Generalizations are unsafe, but to understand foundations at all it is probably necessary to consider them under certain broad classifications. Division is not sharp; a particular foundation may change in character and program through the years, and at a given period exhibit characteristics of several types. For convenience in description and in rough tabulations, five classes are proposed:

General research foundations
Special purpose foundations
Community foundations
Company-sponsored foundations
Family foundations

This Editor has made a rough division of all foundations in this study into these classes in order to estimate proportions and assay trends. But since such division is frequently a matter of personal judgment, based on information that may be inadequate, the text itself makes no such arbitrary assignment, and accuracy in detail is not claimed with respect to these categories. The final category is called "Family and miscellaneous foundations" in the tables; when information was almost totally lacking, the foundation was usually placed in this category.

General Research Foundations

This classification includes nearly all the larger, well-known foundations. They operate under broad charters. They support the research projects in education, health, and welfare which characterize foundation work in the public mind. Usually they have large endowments, but some smaller foundations also support programs of national significance and fall properly within this category of general research. Characteristics include a board of trustees (directors, managers) with broad interests; a trained professional staff to serve as the "eyes" of the foundation, seeking out promising new ventures, evaluating projects offered, handling details of grants—or actual operations, if the foundation is of the operating type—and following through on results, so that future program may be built on past experience.

Only 178 foundations are believed to fall within this category, but these control 66 per cent of the assets of all foundations and are the ones most in the public eye. To a large degree they are the leaders and standard-setters.

Special Purpose Foundations

These foundations are created, many of them by will or trust instrument rather than by incorporation, to serve a charitable purpose closely detailed, usually in the charter or perhaps in a letter of gift. In earlier history, especially in England, nearly all endowments were of this type, and they are widely represented in America. The special purpose may be as narrow as the Dr. Coles Trust Fund for Ice Cream for the Pupils of Scotch Plains and Fanwood (a New Jersey fund too small for inclusion in this Directory), or as broad as the whole field of education, in which case the danger of the purpose becoming outmoded is negligible. Special purpose foundations are the butt of much of the humor directed at foundations, but it needs also to be said that many restricted funds are managed efficiently and are serving useful ends. The danger does not lie in concentrating program on particular needs or projects, which is also the policy of the general research foundations, but in rigid restrictions freezing that concentration for a long period, or perpetually.

Many special purpose funds are small, but a few have large endowments. About 584 foundations in this Directory fall within this category, and they control about 13 per cent of total foundation endowment.

Community Foundations

These are composite foundations, usually set up as trusts rather than corporations, functioning under community control in a sense seldom found in other philanthropic endowments. Capital gifts or bequests are received and administered as to principal by the trust departments of qualified local banks and trust companies. The income is distributed, together with such portions of the principal as may be authorized in any trust, under supervision and control of a distribution committee selected for representative character and knowledge of charitable affairs. Power is reserved to transfer to other similar purposes any funds which can no longer be effectively used for the ends originally designated. The donors may be numerous, and each donor may specify how his gift is to be used, or leave it to the discretion of the distribution committee; but usually with limitation within the city or county within which the community foundation is situated.

The assets of such trusts have shown steady, though not spectacular, increase through the years. They stood at $7 million in 1921, $37 million in 1931, $54 million in 1941, $110 million in 1951.

The Directory lists 101 such trusts, with active capital totaling $340 million. The term "active capital" is used rather than assets since many such trusts possess substantial sums the income of which, or a portion of it, is subject to certain life interests.

Company-Sponsored Foundations

A wave of foundations of a new type has crested in the past decade. These "company-sponsored" foundations are tax-exempt, nonprofit legal entities separate from the parent company but with trustee boards consisting wholly or principally of corporation officers and directors, and having for their purpose the facilitation of corporation giving. A few early examples of company-sponsored foundations exist, but they were set up in great numbers only recently, with an apparent peak in 1952 and 1953.

Unlike the great research foundations (but like many family foundations) they seldom have a substantial corpus, but are more nearly channels for current giving, with just enough reserves to level out contributions during a possible two or three years of slender or absent profits. Except for those associated with large national corporations, their programs are likely to be confined to communities within which they have offices, and to center upon philanthropic agencies that benefit the corporation, its employees, its stockholders, or its business relationships.

Table 6 presents financial data on company-sponsored foundations, by states. This tabulation includes all foundations in the Directory known to have been organized by a business corporation or partnership, or to have such an organization as a direct contributor. In many instances individuals, particularly in the case of family-owned or closely held corporations, also contribute to the foundation, which therefore serves as a vehicle for both company and personal giving. This "mixture" is offset by the probability that quite a few additional foundations, presently classified in the "family" category for lack of adequate information, really belong in the company-sponsored foundation group.

Table 6 demonstrates some of the unusual aspects of company-sponsored foundations. While the total of 1,333 represents about one quarter of all the foundations, some states and regions have few or none; the concentration, as might be expected, is chiefly in the industrial areas.

These are "in-and-out" foundations, spending largely from current gifts. A few have substantial assets (the Ford Motor Company Fund, General Electric Foundation, Sears-Roebuck Foundation, Standard Oil Foundation, and United States Steel Foundation have assets exceeding $20 million each), but assets are not necessarily a measure of giving potential. Many of these foundations donate in a given year more than their total assets at the year's beginning. For the group as a whole, assets totaled $763 million; grants, $102 million, or 13 per cent of assets.

It will be noted that expenditures only slightly exceed grants for this group. This reflects the common company practice of absorbing most of the costs of the sponsored foundation.

Table 7 and Chart II present data on the period of origin for the 1,227 company-sponsored foundations for which this information was available.

It will be observed that very few indeed of these foundations originated before World War II; the heavy increase in the federal corporation income tax at the period was undoubtedly a stimulant to corporate giving and the formation of company-sponsored foundations. This was especially true during the incidence of the excess-profits tax, which most recently was in effect from July 1950 through 1953. It is notable that 60 per cent of these foundations for which information was available were set up in the period 1949 through 1954. Data for later periods is fragmentary; it does not adequately represent the continuing formation of these foundations, though undoubtedly the rate is below the peak of the early 1950's.[1]

Family Foundations

Typically, family (or personal) foundations are set up by a living person or persons rather than by bequest. Generally, they are initially small, and may have no administrative organization or headquarters other than the office of the donor or of a law firm. The trustees are apt to be the donor or donors, his immediate family, and perhaps his lawyer, banker, or business associate.

[1] A detailed study of Chicago company-sponsored foundations presents a closely corresponding figure for the peak period (54.6 per cent for the five-year period 1950 through 1954) with 28.2 per cent formed in the three-year period 1955 to 1957. See Andrews, Frank M., A Study of Company-Sponsored Foundations. Russell Sage Foundation, 1960, pp. 22 and 74.

At the outset, many family foundations serve simply as the channel for the current giving of the living donor. As with company-sponsored foundations, assets are often no adequate measure of their present potential; they may make grants out of current gifts of the donor far out of proportion to their listed assets.

Programs often differ little from the giving of wealthy men and women who have not incorporated their charity. The beneficiaries probably include the local community fund, hospital, the donor's college, possibly his church (such giving is more often done personally), a few national drives, and perhaps one or several pet projects.

This Directory does not enter in the subject index small family foundations devoted primarily to local giving. A gift to one college, probably the donor's alma mater, does not evidence a general interest in higher education. On the other hand, absence of past giving in a particular field does not deny a possible interest in a local project in that area.

Family foundations showed a spectacular growth in numbers, beginning with the incidence of high taxes in World War II, and continuing to the present. The writer assigns to this category 3,006 foundations, or 58 per cent of all those listed in the Directory. But as already noted, this is somewhat of a catch-all category, in which has been placed those foundations on which information is lacking or inadequate. Better information would reduce the proportion. However, the general impression of a great numerical preponderance of this type is certainly proper; a high proportion of the very small foundations, some seven thousand in number in our present records, fall in this class.

The preponderance is only in number. The whole group of 3,006 "family and miscellaneous" foundations are estimated to possess only $1,225 million in assets, or 11 percent of the tabulated assets.

It needs also to be stated that many of these initially small foundations may become the recipients of very large bequests upon the deaths of donors, and some of them build substantial assets through yearly accretions. As funds increase and experience lengthens, programs may change, the trustee board may grow in breadth and perhaps in size, and the foundation may take on projects of national importance. Nearly all of the large general research foundations of today began as family foundations, with limited funds oriented to the personal charities of their donors. In the family foundations of today and those still to be created lie possibilities for further large foundations.

Fields of Foundation Activity

Although the programs supported by foundation grants are almost infinite in variety, there is obvious concentration in certain fields while others obtain little from this source. Useful purposes would be served by more accurate knowledge of the flow of foundation funds. In compiling data for the Directory, the Foundation Library Center took steps to assemble such information. The task proved formidable.

A few earlier attempts should be recorded. Beginning in 1915, Russell Sage Foundation issued a series of pamphlets containing descriptive lists of foundations under the title, American Foundations for Social Welfare, and this series in 1930 included an index classifying 185 foundations into 33 fields. The 1938 edition, listing 188 foundations, indexed 23 fields. In 1946 a substantial book[1] was published under the same title, and this included discussion of the flow of foundation funds and indicated the fields of activity of 335 reporting foundations under 10 major and 10 subclassifications; but neither this volume nor its predecessors indicated dollar values of grants within these fields.

In 1936 Eduard C. Lindeman[2] reported on 100 foundations and community trusts, with financial data on their disbursements from 1921 through 1930, under 10 major headings with many subdivisions; their expenditures totaled $59 million in the later year.

In 1930 the Twentieth Century Fund issued a chart under the title American Foundations and Their Fields classifying 108 foundations under 25 fields, but without financial data. The following year a revision distributed grants of $52 million from 92 foundations among 29 named fields. The 1932 and 1935 editions were pamphlets of substantial size, with the same title, and respectively carried data on the grants of 102 foundations in 1931 in 27 fields totaling $55 million, and grants of 94 foundations in 26 fields involving $34 million.

Beginning in 1939, Raymond Rich Associates took over this series, publishing extensive directories under the same title and including, at first, comparable data. The 1939 volume, No. IV, tabulated $38 million distributed by 115 foundations among 20 fields; Volume V, published in 1942, covered $40 million from 134 foundations, also in 20 fields. Volume VI issued in 1948 was a descriptive directory, without data on grants by field. Volume VII[3] did not distribute grants by fields in dollar amounts, but did include a detailed classified index indicating the areas of interest of some 2,510 foundations.

In 1956 Russell Sage Foundation published the writer's Philanthropic Foundations[1] which includes summaries of earlier data and a special chapter classifying into appropriate fields the scientific research expenditures of 77 larger foundations involving $26 million.[2] The National Science Foundation is presently continuing this project, which is limited, however, to expenditures for basic and applied research.

None of the above studies which included grants in all fields by dollar amounts covered more than a maximum of 134 foundations, and the grants tabulated never exceeded the $55 million of the report published in 1932. Some of the classified indexes of foundations included many more foundations, and for certain purposes are very useful; but the number of foundations expressing interest in a given field is no satisfactory measure of the flow of funds. For example, 65 per cent of the foundations indexed in American Foundations and Their Fields, VII, indicate social welfare as an area of interest; various dollar tabulations indicate that only from 4 to 19 per cent of grants fall in this field.

It is obvious that none of these smaller studies can be compared without heavy reservations with a year such as 1957, when 110 large foundations disbursed $521 million, with one among them—The Ford Foundation—disbursing in grants in this single year more than six times as much as the total for all the foundations in the largest sample previously tabulated.

Nevertheless, for its historical value, Table 8 details for selected years the flow of foundation funds from the data we have available. The amounts involved are not inconsiderable in the framework of their own time, and with consideration of the much greater value of the dollar in the earlier periods. To make comparison possible the writer has attempted to fit the varied category systems of these earlier studies into the standard categories of The Foundation Library Center.

It may be well to consider first the six earlier estimates listed in Table 8. They range in time from 1921 to 1940. There is internal evidence that the various compilers, using a variety of classification systems, did not produce closely comparable results, but at least their universes were similar—the number of foundations varied only from 94 to 134, with disbursements ranging from $34 million to $59 million. The grant record, incidentally, did not represent a steady growth over the two decades; the high points were in 1930 ($59 million) and 1931 before the Great Depression seriously affected foundation income; by 1934 there was a deep dip to $34 million, and then a slow recovery, the period closing with $40 million in 1940.

In all six tabulations EDUCATION and HEALTH were the favored categories by a large margin, together accounting for more than 60 per cent of the six-survey total. EDUCATION obtained about 40 per cent of the grants as tabulated by Lindeman in 1921 and 1930, dropping to a little more than a quarter of the total in the later Twentieth Century Fund and Rich tabulations. This decline may have been more apparent than real. Professor Lindeman may have placed under EDUCATION grants that channeled through colleges but which the other tabulators placed under specific subject. HEALTH shows a fairly consistent percentage throughout the period.

SOCIAL WELFARE is the category next in importance, but ranged only from 13 to 19 per cent of the total grants. Even this record—and the later data are more startling—is a surprise, for more foundations by number express interest in this area than in any other, and the term itself is a catchall. But clearly the total of many scattering small grants does not approach the totals for the less frequent but larger grants in the fields of EDUCATION and HEALTH. Moreover, there is some evidence that in these two decades grants to SOCIAL WELFARE were declining, with a brief opposite movement in the Great Depression, when foundations were not exempt from pleas to feed the starving.

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH is a very close fourth for the period as a whole, and passed SOCIAL WELFARE in grant receipts in three of the six tabulations. Its percentage rose from a low of 6 in 1921 to a high of 21 per cent in the first Twentieth Century Fund tabulation of 1931. Perhaps allowance must be made again for an unconscious emphasis by the tabulator; the Fund was at this point determining its own program in scientific research, with emphasis on the field of Economics; its tabulators may have been scientific-research sensitive.

None of the other categories reached as much as 5 per cent of total grants in any of the six years. The HUMANITIES showed some evidence of climbing, from a negligible amount through 1930 to a level of about 4 per cent in the later studies. GOVERNMENT varied, but with a tendency to rise. INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS amounted close to $2 million and 4 per cent in 1931, but then declined, just as the clouds of World War II were thickening and expenditures in this field would, in retrospect, seem critically important. RELIGION received small amounts in all the years tabulated, and was the least favored category in total for the six surveys.

The New Survey

The Foundation Library Center undertook its present estimate of the flow of foundation funds with reluctance, aware that in this matter accuracy is not attainable. In addition to the unconscious biases of any interpreter, three major problems are only too apparent.

First, cooperation can be secured from only a relatively small proportion of foundations, though fortunately most of the larger ones respond; in terms of percentage of expenditures, the representation is therefore fairly satisfactory. For example, in our "large foundation" sample we used 110 of the 129 foundations that have assets of $10 million or more. Of these 110 foundations, 51 issue printed reports at least biennially,[1] and 93 filled in our Questionnaire, which includes data on flow of funds.

[1] Ten more report less frequently, or have a first report in preparation.

For smaller foundations representation was much poorer; partly for this reason and partly to bring the survey into manageable dimensions, we took two samples of 100 foundations each from those with assets below $10 million but at least $1 million, and for small foundations with assets below $1 million. In neither case was the sample random (we had to exclude foundations where information was inadequate), and in the second case it represented a small proportion of its universe. Therefore we cannot be certain that these samples, blown up to the full universes in each case, are completely accurate; the bias that made a foundation unwilling to answer our inquiries may also have resulted in expenditures somewhat differing from those that did reply. Nevertheless, the grants represented in the untabulated intermediate and small foundations come only to approximately 20 per cent of the grant total, so that the possible error from this cause cannot be considerable.

Of more concern is the second problem: a given grant could often be assigned to two or more quite different categories. For example, a Japanese medical student is given a grant for research in biochemistry at Kyoto University. Was the grant educational, and if so, in support of a university or for the training of a student? Or should it be classified as scientific research, and if so, under biological sciences, or medical sciences, or chemistry? Or did the foundation really have in mind a gift abroad, either as technical assistance or primarily to improve international relations?

Not only are there subjective differences of this sort, but many grants are by their very nature interdisciplinary. Chemistry is clearly a physical science, but what of biochemistry? And is a grant to a graduate student, working for his doctorate but doing research in a quite specific field, a grant toward EDUCATION or in the special field of study? The purpose of the donor should be controlling, if it can be discovered; but decisions must often be arbitrary.

The third difficulty is the classification system itself. It may be possible to divide all human interests and activities into a system of logical, nonoverlapping categories, but the attempts in this direction on the part of learned societies, librarians, encyclopedists, and others show wide divergence, and no one of them is well adapted to a variety of uses. A classification system for foundation grants presents further problems. If comparisons with the past are to be possible, the system adopted should bear some relation to previous classification systems, however faulty. It must take into account the things foundations actually do support. Moreover, to avoid errors and to encourage a wider response, it must be simple. Finally, and perhaps most damaging from the viewpoint of a logical system, it must compromise between the ideal of representing only fields of interest and support and the necessity for including some agency entries. For example, company-sponsored foundations and many family foundations contribute heavily to community chests and united funds. In the case of the Greater New York Fund, such a contribution was distributed among 425 agencies operating in many diverse fields. We could not expect foundations to analyze into fields their chest contributions; it was necessary to include a subcategory under SOCIAL WELFARE, "Community Funds."

The classification system finally adopted is reproduced on pages 682–685, together with the instructions accompanying this portion of the Questionnaire. It is the result of much comparison, experience, and consultation, but has compromised logic with pragmatism.

Foundations were not asked to assign dollar amounts to the various major and minor fields; it was felt that few of them would be willing to undertake so large an accounting operation, and moreover the results might be unsatisfactory in many cases because of lack of familiarity with the classification system as a whole. The dollar amounts for the estimates presented below were derived as follows:

1. For each foundation in the samples described above, all available pertinent data were assembled. If dollar amounts for specific grants were available from annual reports, information returns to the government, or other sources, these were assigned to the appropriate subcategory; where several choices seemed possible, guidance was taken from the foundation's checking on its Questionnaire.
2. Where detailed reports of this sort were not available, the total grants were distributed proportionally among the checked items on the Questionnaire, weighted for the a, b, and c designations.

As a test of our own estimates against totals that might have been assigned by the foundation concerned, one large foundation did this job in their own offices while we made the tabulation in accordance with our usual procedures. Both tabulations reported grants in five major categories. Minor dollar differences resulted, especially among the subcategories; but in the major fields, amounts assigned by the two tabulations never differed by as much as 1 per cent of the grants total.

It is probable that in a few instances severe differences would appear; for this reason the Center will publish only summary tables, where totals tend to minimize such differences and will not embarrass a particular foundation.

The Large Foundations

This Directory includes 129 foundations in the United States with assets of $10 million or more at market value. The number varies from time to time as the stock market climbs or falls, and as new large foundations come into existence or older ones acquire new assets, or reduce their capital. We have already noted that these relatively few foundations have more than three quarters of the assets of all foundations, and in the year of our tabulations, their proportion of total foundation grants was nearly 56 per cent. We therefore analyzed carefully the grants of 110 of these larger foundations for which adequate records were available at the time the analysis was made, and present the findings in Table 9.

The first line of Table 9 reports the distribution of $521 million in grants from these 110 foundations among eight major fields. "Grants" in this case includes costs of operating programs by foundations which are either wholly or partially operating organizations; it does not include staff costs in running the foundation and disbursing grants. Data are actual expenditures, not voted appropriations, and for the year 1957 where available; in a few cases earlier data had to be substituted.

It happens that 1957 was not, however, a representative year. In 1956 and in 1957 The Ford Foundation made large payments from its capital grant of $500 million for hospitals, medical schools, and salaries of professors in colleges. Therefore, the grants of 110 foundations have been recomputed with these special grants, totaling $168.7 million under HEALTH and $104.4 million under EDUCATION, removed. The "adjusted" totals are regarded as more nearly representative of the continuing situation and a better basis of comparison with past records. The radical difference is in the reduction of expenditures in the HEALTH field from 39 to 14 per cent of the total; all other categories are increased percentagewise, even including EDUCATION which suffered a drastic dollar reduction in the adjustment.

It may be useful to compare the adjusted figures with earlier records shown in Table 8. EDUCATION, always a favored field, has risen to 47 per cent, or nearly half of all grant expenditures. This is not surprising. EDUCATION fulfills one of the major tenets of foundation doctrine, which, in Andrew Carnegie's colorful phrase, is placing within reach "the ladders upon which the aspiring can rise." Direct help may be given, if desired, to students, to research scholars, to teachers, to adults. Nearly every operation a foundation undertakes is channeled through educational institutions or has educators as participants. And it is more than possible that recent emphasis on "the crisis in education" may account for some of the bulge in recent foundation giving in this field. In the earlier tabulations, EDUCATION ranged between 24 and 43 per cent; its previous high of 43 per cent was in the Lindeman study for 1921.

HEALTH, at 14 per cent in 1957, is substantially below any earlier record; but even the adjusted $35 million is more than twice any previous dollar amount. It seems possible that massive government expenditures, both for research in health and for such other purposes as hospital building, have reduced the relative urgency of this field in the view of some foundations.

SOCIAL WELFARE, at 9 per cent, continues the relative decline already noted. Possibly this 9 per cent—and the still more startling 4 per cent if all 1957 expenditures are taken—is the most surprising ratio in the series. From its traditional position among the major three fields of foundation interest, it has now dropped to a minor position. Undoubtedly the expansion of social security and heavy government intervention in other areas traditionally supported by voluntary welfare services have accelerated this decline. Possibly the controversial nature of some "social" welfare programs has caused hesitancy in conservative boards.

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH at 13 per cent has not quite maintained its position percentagewise, though it has climbed in dollars. This is, however, a category in which wide variations may be no more than the vagaries of different compilers of statistics. Research in the MEDICAL SCIENCES category, for example, might often be placed with equal logic under HEALTH or under EDUCATION. But the high repute of foundations in the field of SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH is a tribute to the care with which their dollars are expended, for by any tabulation the amounts invested are not substantial in comparison with expenditures in this field by either government or industry.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS accounted for more than $18 million in grants from these larger foundations, or 8 per cent of the adjusted total. This is a very substantial increase above previous records. It is a trend that one Congressional Committee viewed with alarm, but in the light of present world conditions, it is likely to continue.

All other categories showed little change from previous percentage positions. HUMANITIES, in spite of some recent emphasis on a neglected field, accounted for only 4 per cent of 1957 grants. RELIGION held its 3 per cent proportion first attained in 1940. GOVERNMENT registered a slight decline to 2 per cent.

Special Foundations

Since foundations fall into certain fairly distinct classes, it seemed useful to identify particular types for separate study. The 110 large foundations included seven company-sponsored foundations, of which the Ford Motor Company Fund (not to be confused with The Ford Foundation), the Sears-Roebuck Foundation, and United States Steel Foundation are examples. The giving pattern for this group differs materially from adjusted percentages of the whole group. The most notable increase is in SOCIAL WELFARE; this is largely due to the heavy contributions of companies and their foundations to community chests and united funds. (As will later appear, almost exactly half the total contributions to Community Funds came from these few company-sponsored foundations.)

In dollar amounts, their contribution to EDUCATION was somewhat larger than for SOCIAL WELFARE, but fell below the average for the whole group of foundations. HEALTH—frequently for support of hospitals in communities where their plants or offices were located—received a substantial 20 per cent. All other categories were minor, though in comparison with the giving of other foundations, this group emphasized GOVERNMENT. INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS and RELIGION received substantially no funds.

Eight large community foundations were discovered among the 110 tabulations; examples include the Chicago Community Trust, the Cleveland Foundation, the New York Community Trust. Forty per cent of the expenditures of this group were in the field of EDUCATION, with Scholarships a chief interest. Again, SOCIAL WELFARE was emphasized, with 27 per cent of expenditures. HEALTH came third with 21 per cent. All other categories were negligible.

The Subcategories

In addition to the eight major categories that have been discussed, the Questionnaire included 87 subcategories (and catchall Others). All expenditures were distributed among these subcategories. Examination of any field of interest in terms of its subcategories is interesting and revealing, but since such finer apportionment of grants is subject to even graver differences of opinion and outright error, we publish summaries only in the tables that follow, and urge that they be accepted with reservation, especially where the totals involved are small.

1. Education

As we have seen, EDUCATION is the favored major field. Among the subcategories Aid to Teachers was highest in 1957, but this is due primarily to The Ford Foundation special payments in that year of $104 million; with removal of that sum, this subcategory would have ranked fifth. Only two other foundations gave to this subcategory as much as a quarter of their grants.

Support of Higher Education in general claimed $50 million from 55 of the larger foundations, 14 of which gave it at least a quarter of their total grants. Elementary and Secondary Schools secured over $11 million from the larger foundations, or 5 per cent of total educational expenditures; 32 foundations contributed to this total, but only 2 of them a substantial portion of their year's grants.

Buildings and Equipment came fourth in total—$10 million, and most of this amount went to institutions of higher education. In some sense this is a near equivalent to contributions for Endowment, listed lower in the Table at under $5 million. These figures somewhat modify the general impression that the larger foundations seldom contribute to endowment or to "bricks and mortar." True, the two classifications together account for only $15 million, or about 7 per cent of the educational grants, but 31 foundations did make some grants for buildings and equipment, and 9 contributed to endowment, 3 of the latter not being included in the former 31.

Also high among the educational subcategories are Fellowships (interpreted as aid to graduate students) and Scholarships, given to undergraduates. The former claimed more than $8 million, with 30 foundations participating, 6 of them regarding such training as a major interest. Scholarships accounted for somewhat less money, $6 million, but more foundations (40) participated. It may be worth noting that 15 of these larger foundations contributed to both Fellowships and Scholarships; 15 to Fellowships alone; and 25 to Scholarships alone. Only 4 foundations gave, and in negligible amounts, for Student Loans, probably reflecting a feeling that in many colleges loan funds are in excess supply; all but one of these were also represented in the scholarship-fellowship lists. A total of 56 foundations—more than half—were supporting Scholarships, Fellowships, or Student Loans.

Adult Education and Dissemination of Knowledge (classifications that are sometimes interchangeable) accounted for $7 and $4 million respectively. Educational Research received $3.5 million, or 2 per cent of educational grants. Libraries, Museums, and Educational Associations each received less than 1 per cent of the educational grants, though nearly a quarter of the foundations sampled made some library contributions.

In total, 94 of the 110 foundations made grants to EDUCATION in some form. A higher percentage of large foundations contribute to EDUCATION than to any of the other major fields.

2. Health

Although 12 categories were included under HEALTH, only two of them received substantial sums from this group of foundations. Hospitals, of course, came first with $113 million, or 55 per cent of the HEALTH total. But $100.5 million of this sum was in the single extraordinary Ford Foundation grant. Similarly the $81 million for Medical Education consisted largely of the $68 million extraordinary Ford grant to medical schools. Without these two out-of-usual-program grants, Table 11 would present a more balanced and probably more valid picture. Hospitals would descend to a mere $12 million, or 35 per cent of the HEALTH total. Medical Education would drop to $13 million, which would nevertheless leave it at 37 per cent, or slightly above Hospitals. The other percentages, none of which exceeds 1 in the original table, would climb to a noticeable 7 per cent in the case of Mental Health, and 5 per cent for Public Health and for Nursing.

It remains notable, and perhaps an indication of present practice at least among the larger foundations, that Care of the Sick, a direct-relief category, totaled only $1.2 million, and this largely because of the contributions of two foundations whose charters narrowly limit them to this area. Dentistry accounted for slightly over $1 million, nearly three quarters of which was due to one foundation specializing in this field. Only small contributions were recorded for National Health Agencies, Health Services, Health Education, and Accident Prevention.

Table 11 also includes data on the number of foundations, among the 110, which included any grants to the subcategories, and also how many of them gave as much as 25 per cent of their grants in a given subcategory. Sixty of the 110 foundations contributed to Hospitals, and 8 of them disbursed at least a quarter of their grant money in this area. Medical Education came next, claiming attention from 31 of the larger foundations, and major interest from 7. Thereafter the numbers of interested foundations decrease, and in no case—except Care of the Sick for the reason already noted—did more than one foundation select a subcategory for a substantial part of its grants. Finally, 83 of these larger foundations made some grants in the field of HEALTH; 27 did not.

3. Social Welfare

Expenditures for SOCIAL WELFARE totaled under $22 million, or less than one tenth of the educational grants. However, 67 of the 110 foundations expressed some interest in this area.

Youth Agencies achieved the highest subtotal, over $5 million and 24 per cent of the grants for SOCIAL WELFARE. Nearly half (46) of all the larger foundations made some contributions in this subcategory, but one of them, long known for its special interest in boys, accounted for almost a quarter of the total for the group. Two others were in the 25 per cent or more classification under this subcategory.

Community Funds was the next most important subcategory, accounting for about $4.8 million from 39 foundations, 3 of which gave more than a quarter of their total grants in this field. Since community chests and united funds are the chief beneficiaries under this subcategory, it is not surprising that 6 company-sponsored foundations contributed almost exactly half of the total given to Community Funds. The remainder was made up in grants from family foundations, community foundations, and a small number of general research foundations, none of which gave substantial amounts.

Child Welfare came next in importance, with contributions of $3 million from 37 foundations, 2 of which specialized in the area. Aside from these, no contributions were heavy.

Four subcategories—the Handicapped, Family Service, the Aged, and Intercultural Relations—are closely grouped, each receiving from these foundations a little more than $1 million. As Table 12 indicates, nearly a third of the larger foundations made some grants in the field of the Handicapped. One specialized in the field, but no single contribution was outstanding. Family Service received the next largest amount, nearly half of it coming from a group of community foundations where in most cases the funds were earmarked for particular agencies. Slightly more than $1 million went to the Aged, but since all but one of the substantial amounts came from the larger research foundations, it is obvious that research is being stressed in this field rather than actual care. A dozen foundations concerned themselves with Intercultural Relations, but only two made substantial monetary grants, and only one of these contributed to this field as much as a quarter of its total grants.

Three subcategories fall between $1 million and $500,000 in grants. Social Research received $965,000 in grants from 20 foundations, with one of them giving it more than a quarter of its total grants. Moreover, akin to this field are many of the grants which have been listed under SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH: Social Sciences. Delinquency and Crime, with $806,000 from 19 foundations, probably attracted more grants in 1957 than its usual share because of increased concern with problems of juvenile delinquency; however, no foundation made this subcategory a major interest. Relief once preempted large portions of foundation grants; now it is down to $626,000 from all the larger foundations together, and would be less except for charter provisions that in some cases dictate this field.

The remaining subcategories, Housing and Industrial Relations, received only minor grants; though, of course, some of the SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH grants in the field of Economics dealt with industrial relations problems.

4. Scientific Research

Among these larger foundations, SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH claimed substantially larger sums than SOCIAL WELFARE, for a total of $33 million, or 13 per cent of the adjusted expenditures, from 60 foundations. Because this is a category that overlaps various subject fields, absolute comparisons are difficult. The present record considerably exceeds in dollar amount any of the earlier general records, though not in per cent of total grants.

Another comparison may be more pertinent for short-term changes. For National Science Foundation, the writer conducted a survey[1] of support of scientific research in 1953 by 77 larger foundations. Definitions were identical, but since scientific research was the sole subject of the 1953 inquiry, it may be presumed that all expenditures that could be so designated were there included. The 1953 survey indicated SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH expenditures of $26 million out of total expenditures of $164 million, at a rate of about 16 per cent. This compares with $33 million for 1957, out of grants (total expenditures would have been somewhat larger) of $248 million, or 13 per cent. Under the differing situations in these two studies, the percentage figures are probably closely comparable. Major differences occur, however, in the distribution of these grants among the fields of research, as is apparent from Table 13 and Charts III and IV.

The Life Sciences (chiefly biological and medical research) maintained an almost stationary position in dollars, with some decline in percentage relationship. The Physical Sciences showed a tremendous leap in both dollars and position. The Social Sciences dropped somewhat in dollars, and substantially in percentage of research grants. Some of the reasons for these changes appear in the more detailed analysis of Table 14, breaking down the 1957 figures.

Medical Sciences and Biological Sciences are categories which foundations find it difficult to discriminate between, and one large foundation makes no such attempt. Together, they account for over $10 million in grants, or 32 per cent of the total for SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH. The Medical Sciences are slightly higher, and in this popular field 39 foundations supported research, 7 of them giving to it at least a quarter of their total grants. Eleven of the same foundations and 3 additional ones contributed to Biological Sciences, with 2 of them specially emphasizing this area. In the Medical Sciences the picture is that of substantial funds flowing from many foundations, with the grants of none of them approaching a total of $1 million; but in the Biological Sciences one large foundation accounted for more than half of the total grants recorded.

The remaining Life Sciences category, Agricultural Sciences, showed grants of over $3 million from 7 foundations—approximately three times the dollar totals for this subcategory in 1953. But in this case one foundation accounted for more than 70 per cent of the total, so that severe fluctuations might occur with a change in program on the part of this foundation alone.

The Physical Sciences, it has been noted, showed a substantial increase. The highest total was for Physics, which received $5.5 million from only 9 foundations. More than half of this amount, however, came from a single foundation which made a one-time grant to advance pure research, chiefly in this area. It is this grant which accounts for the suddenly large total in this category, though increasing national attention to the sciences and science training may also be reflected. The latter influence may largely account for Chemistry's $2.7 million from 7 foundations, though the names of some of these foundations make it clear that another factor is the newly emphasized relationships of chemistry to nutrition and health.

The Earth Sciences claimed $754,000 from 6 foundations; Astronomy, $342,000 from just one. The allied fields of Engineering, Mathematics, and Statistical Method were all less than 2 per cent of scientific research expenditures, and received grants from only a few foundations.

The relative decline of the Social Sciences is remarkable in a period when problems in this area are increasingly emphasized. Moreover, it was Economics that received the lion's share, $4.6 million from 16 foundations. More than half of this total came from a single large foundation.

Sociology, with minor contributions for the allied disciplines of Anthropology and Social Psychology, accounted for nearly $3 million. Many foundations participated, but none had a commanding share of the total. Moreover, in no instance did a foundation contribute as much as a quarter of its total in grants to any of these three fields.

Political Science received nearly $2 million from 8 foundations, more than half of this sum from one large foundation.

5. Humanities

Precise definitions for "the humanities" do not exist; the term may be defined broadly or narrowly.[1] The subcategories in Table 15 indicate the working definition that has been adopted for this study. The field as a whole received only modest support, about $10 million, from 47 foundations. This is about 4 per cent of the adjusted grants of the larger foundations for the year.

Fine Arts was the subcategory receiving the largest amount, nearly $2.5 million from 26 foundations, one of which devotes all of its funds to this area, and another makes it a major interest. This subcategory has been subject to wide fluctuations over the years, with tremendous increases in certain years when a large foundation has donated a collection to an art museum.

Music claimed a little over $1.5 million, from 30 foundations. Here again one foundation devoted all its funds to this area; and another, nearly all its funds. These 2 accounted for more than half of the total. Remaining grants were usually small, often from community foundations and presumably for a specified community musical enterprise.

Communications received nearly $2 million, from 7 foundations. Here it was difficult to distinguish between a grant for the improvement of means of communication and one designed to spread more effectively a particular message—in which case it might have been classified Adult Education, or under a specific subject category. One foundation accounted for more than two thirds of the total.

Recreation received only a little more than $1 million, but from 24 foundations. Here the pattern was chiefly small grants, often from community, company, or family foundations. Parks and Playgrounds may be regarded as a subdivision of Recreation; this would add $715,000 to the Recreation total, but not alter the pattern.

History claimed a little over $1 million from 15 foundations, with only one small foundation (offering scholarships in this area) making it a principal interest. Language and Literature received $645,000 from 7 foundations, one of which (offering stipends for writers) accounted for more than two thirds of the total. It should also be noted that a certain other foundation, noted for the Maecenas pattern of its giving, has rigidly classified all its grants as Fellowships, under EDUCATION; except for this stipulation, Language and Literature and several other categories under the HUMANITIES would have shown larger totals.

The Entertainment Arts received $373,000 from 10 foundations, a total surprisingly low. Philosophy was in last place under the HUMANITIES, with $317,000 from 7 foundations.

6. Religion

Less than one third of the larger foundations—36—reported any contributions to RELIGION, and their total was $8.5 million, or about 3 per cent of the "adjusted" grants of the whole group. Because of the need for information concerning Faiths as well as Fields, foundations were asked to check under both subheads; but for purposes of this analysis of flow of foundation funds, dollar amounts have been distributed among Fields, where this was possible from the data available. As Table 16 indicates, for about 5 per cent of the grants Fields information was not available. These are reported under Faiths, but the amounts are residual sums, not to be taken as significant with respect to either totals for the Faiths indicated, or proportions among them.

[a] This table does not supply information on religious grants by faith. It was constructed with relation to fields, and the category "faith" was used only if no field was indicated.

Theological Seminaries preempted 44 per cent of the total religious grants, but $3 million of the less than $4 million involved came from a single foundation which in this year gave heavy grants in this area. However, one other foundation gave more than a quarter of its total grants to these institutions, and they have long been favored recipients among the foundations that do contribute to RELIGION. Church Support, a catchall category, came next, with over $2 million from 24 foundations. Community foundations (which in many cases received funds earmarked for a particular church) and family foundations (which frequently gave to the donor's church) predominated in this subcategory; one foundation made it a principal interest.

Church-related Schools received $759,000 from 3 foundations, with most of this total coming from a single foundation heavily supporting this area. Ministers were a special concern among 6 foundations, which made grants totaling $416,000.

Church-sponsored Welfare Programs accounted for $546,000 from 13 foundations. When the classification system was devised it was anticipated that Institutional Care under church auspices would receive sums large enough to be worth separate accounting, though properly a part of Welfare Programs; but it turned out that grants from the larger foundations for this purpose were negligible.

Home Missions and Programs Abroad were modestly supported by 4 foundations each, the totals being $153,000 and $171,000. Three of the 4 foundations supporting Home Missions also supported Programs Abroad, and with almost identical amounts.

7. Government

Support for studies in the field of GOVERNMENT amounted to less than $4 million, received from 25 different larger foundations. Almost half of the total amount came from a single foundation, which was the largest contributor in three of the five subcategories for which amounts were reported. None of these larger foundations reported contributions for Civil Liberties in this year.

City and Regional Planning claimed the largest amount, $1.7 million from 16 foundations; more than half of this sum, however, came from the large foundation already mentioned. It is perhaps notable that neither this nor any other subcategory under GOVERNMENT was a major interest of any of the 110 larger foundations.

The promotion of Citizenship claimed $900,000 from 10 foundations, with, in this case, company-sponsored foundations first and third in size of contribution. Public Administration received grants of $781,000 from 11 foundations.

Legal Studies and Taxation, which in some respects are overlapping classifications, received small amounts—$290,000 and $280,000 respectively—and few foundations contributed to either.

8. International Affairs

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS claimed a substantial portion of grants from the larger foundations in 1957—8 per cent of the adjusted total. There were 29 foundations contributing, but 62 per cent of the $18 million involved came from one large foundation.

It must not be assumed that this $18 million is a measure of foundation money spent abroad. On one hand, area and other studies directed toward better understanding of the world situation are classified here, even if all the money was spent within the United States and possibly among our own citizens. On the other hand, sums spent abroad for medical research and similar purposes are not classified under INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS unless the chief intent was the improvement of international relations or conditions in that particular country rather than the advancement of knowledge in the field concerned. With these qualifications in mind, we turn to Table 18.

Table 18. GRANTS FOR INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

Total	29	–	$18,682	100

International Studies received $6.6 million from 17 foundations, but more than half of this sum came from the single large foundation already noted. However, 2 smaller foundations made this a principal concern in their total grants program, and altogether 5 foundations gave at least a quarter million toward International Studies in 1957. The world situation has clearly made this an area of concern for a number of foundations.

Technical Assistance for underdeveloped countries accounted for over $5 million, four fifths of this amount coming from the single large foundation already noted; 2 other foundations gave grants exceeding a quarter million dollars.

Exchange of Persons programs attracted about $4.5 million from 15 foundations, 4 of which contributed $400,000 or more. The remaining grants were small.

Economic Aid, which was interpreted as help for ongoing programs rather than Technical Assistance, and not Relief, amounted to $1.5 million, all but $84,000 of which came from a single foundation. Relief in other countries attracted funds from 8 foundations, but in only small amounts, reaching a total of $385,000.

The active promotion of Peace (it should be acknowledged that all the other subcategories under International Affairs have this as an implied purpose) attracted specific grants from 5 foundations, totaling $405,000. One of these has Peace as its sole chartered purpose, but its approach to this objective has also involved expenditures that fall in various other categories. However, it accounted for more than half of the total reported.

Intermediate Foundations

There are presently about 651 foundations of "intermediate size," with assets ranging between $1 million and $10 million. Their total assets of about $1,855 million represent 16 per cent of the assets of all tabulated foundations. However, in this group assets are not a measure of contribution potential. Many are company-sponsored or family foundations, in either case representing a channel through which donors usually make substantial annual contributions for immediate expenditure. To cite one example, the Smith, Kline & French Foundation had in 1958 a corpus of $1,210,630, and made grants totaling $706,110. Grants of the intermediate foundations were $130.7 million, or about 21 per cent of total foundation grants.

Because these foundations differ in type and interests from the large research foundations mainly represented in the preceding data, a study of the flow of their funds seemed desirable. Since few of these foundations publish reports and their response to the Center's Questionnaire was less good than for the larger foundations, no attempt was made to apportion the grants of each of these foundations into fields. A sample of 100 was taken, about one seventh of the total. Two criteria governed the selection: first, adequate data must be available for separation of grants into at least the major categories of the Questionnaire; then, within this limitation, an effort was made to build a sample that would be representative with respect to size, type, and geographical distribution.

Table 19 presents the grants of these 100 foundations by field, and includes a tabulation of the 24 company-sponsored foundations found within this group. Chart V compares the fields of giving of foundations in differing size categories.

Differences are substantial between the interest-areas of the 100 intermediate foundations and the adjusted averages for the 110 large foundations. EDUCATION, which obtained 47 per cent of the grants of the large foundations, drops to 32 per cent for those of intermediate size; but the company-sponsored foundations in this group, many of which have scholarship programs, do give 40 per cent in this field.

HEALTH, representing 14 per cent of the grants of the large foundations, receives 17 per cent from those of intermediate size. SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH, at 13 per cent for the large foundations, has an almost identical slice of the intermediate pie—12 per cent.

SOCIAL WELFARE represents one of the big swings. Receiving only 9 per cent from the large foundations, it gets 18 per cent—almost a fifth—from those of intermediate size, and a still larger slice from the company-sponsored component of this group. Contributions to community chests and united funds on the part of both corporation and family foundations have helped swell this total. The HUMANITIES, also, fare relatively better, the percentage rising from 4 per cent for the large foundations to 11 per cent in this group.

Contributions to RELIGION, GOVERNMENT, and INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS are all low, none rising to quite 4 per cent of the totals for the intermediate group. In this they do not differ markedly from the pattern for the large foundations, except that the latter did contribute 8 per cent toward INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS.

These differences are in many cases substantial, percentagewise. Except in the extra contributions for SOCIAL WELFARE, however, they do not greatly affect the total foundation picture, for the whole universe of intermediate foundations represents only 21 per cent of total foundation grants. But if our sample of intermediate foundations is representative for the group, in at least three of the major fields—SOCIAL WELFARE, HUMANITIES, and GOVERNMENT—the contributions of the intermediate foundations exceed the contributions of the hundred-odd large foundations in actual dollar totals.

No attempt has been made to break down the giving of the intermediate foundations into subcategories. Data are in many cases inadequate for this purpose, and the total sums involved are often so small that special expenditures in one year by one foundation would lead to dubious interpretations.

Small Foundations

The Foundation Directory includes some 4,422 small foundations, defined as those with assets of less than $1 million. In addition, about seven thousand still smaller foundations are known to us but not included in the Directory or in this tabulation—those which have neither $50,000 in assets nor grants in the most recent year of at least $10,000. Though the omitted group are numerous, the funds they spend are small, and may be neglected in this quantitative study of the flow of foundation funds.

The group of some 4,400 small foundations included in the Directory had assets of $851 million—7 per cent of the assets held by 85 per cent of the listed foundations. However, they spent in grants some $146 million in the year of record. This is about 23 per cent of the total tabulated. It is small in comparison with the 56 per cent for merely 129 large foundations, but since small foundations sometimes grow into large ones, it may be important to determine whether any substantial differences exist in the area decisions of the trustees of foundations of small size. In many cases, of course, these are family foundations, company-sponsored foundations, or mixtures of both, representing channels for current giving. Assets are even less an index of amount of giving than with the intermediate foundations; for example, the Goulandris Foundation reported assets of $1,037 at the beginning of 1958 and $763 at its close; but made 1958 grants totaling $27,589.

Again, a sample of 100 of these foundations was chosen. While an effort was made to take a sample representative with respect to type, size, and geographical location, this group comprises only 1 in 44 of the universe, and choice was limited by the need to take those which had answered our Questionnaire, or for which we had other sufficient data. Table 20 represents these 100 small foundations; we express no certainty that the percentage distributions of their grants can be applied with entire confidence to the remainder of their universe.

In this group of 100 small foundations 43 were company-sponsored, though not all of these were wholly corporation foundations. (Many small foundations receive annual contributions from both family-held companies and one or more individuals.) The company-sponsored segment of this sample differs from the remainder chiefly in much higher contributions for EDUCATION, and less for SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH and for some of the other low categories. With less than half the assets of the group, the company-sponsored foundations gave more than two thirds of the grants; the largest part of their grants came, not from investment income, but from current gifts of the sponsoring companies or capital accumulations.

As compared with the grants of the large foundations, the differences in the grant choices of the small foundations are mostly those foreshadowed by findings with those of intermediate size. EDUCATION, which represented 47 per cent for the large foundations and only 32 per cent for the intermediate ones, climbed slightly to 35 per cent, due entirely to the substantial contributions in this direction (43 per cent) of the company-sponsored foundations. HEALTH remained almost stationary, at 18 per cent as against 17 per cent for the intermediate foundations.

SOCIAL WELFARE continued the remarkable climb foreshadowed by the intermediate foundations, rising to 25 per cent for the small foundations. Contributions to community chests and united funds, especially by the company-sponsored foundations, and small but numerous gifts to many "heart-appeal" causes account for much of this increase.

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH falls off sharply, to 6 per cent, and is almost negligible for the company-sponsored foundation segment of the sample. Most such "research" is actually support for agencies dealing with a specific disease, frequently cancer.

The HUMANITIES, which had climbed to 11 per cent among the intermediate foundations, drop down to 3 per cent. RELIGION shows an upsurge to 8 per cent, including substantial contributions from many of the small company-sponsored foundations.

GOVERNMENT and INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS remain at low levels among the small foundations.

Summary

The total number of foundations for which our survey obtained data on assets is 5,113. Of these, assets of $8.8 billion, more than three quarters, were in the hands of the 129 large foundations; about one sixth of the assets were in the 651 intermediate foundations, with assets ranging between $1 and $10 million; the 4,422 small foundations had less than one twelfth of the assets.

The grant expenditures, totaling $625 million, represent somewhat larger proportions for the smaller foundations. Large foundations accounted for 56 per cent of the grant dollars. The intermediate foundations represent 21 per cent of the total. The small foundations account for 23 per cent, helped by their larger share of contributions from the current gifts of donors.

With three quarters of the assets and more than half the grants in the control of the relatively few large foundations, it is obvious that the flow of foundation funds is in good part a reflection of their grant decisions. Nevertheless, the remaining foundations do spend a total of about $277 million, which is quite enough to accomplish important objectives in favored fields, and to affect substantially the giving pattern.

Table 21 and the Frontispiece present a composite picture of the flow of funds for all the foundations. It is subject to the reservations already pointed out with respect to varying judgments on the proper category for a specific grant. Its reliability is further limited by the fact that only for the large foundations was a substantially complete tabulation made; for the intermediate and small foundations, samples of 100 were taken in each case, and the percentage distributions found in these samples applied to the reported grants of all foundations in the groups. However, because of the concentration of foundation assets and grants among the larger foundations, the sample of 310 foundations did include $273 million in grants, or nearly 44 per cent of the grant money. It is therefore believed that errors resulting from the sampling process adopted cannot be large.

According to our estimates, 41 per cent of the grants of American foundations currently go to the field of EDUCATION. The concentration is heaviest from the large foundations, which grant 47 per cent of their dollars. But all asset groups give more to EDUCATION than to any other field.

Sixteen per cent of foundation funds go to the field of HEALTH. The smaller foundations contribute at a somewhat higher rate than the large ones, but for all, this appears to be a field of reduced proportional expenditure.

The broad field of SOCIAL WELFARE claimed 15 per cent of foundation grants by amount. By broad averages, the smaller the foundation, the higher the concentration in this area. Even in dollar amounts, intermediate and small foundations accounted for two thirds of the $90 million involved.

Next in order of receipts was SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH, with $71 million. In this field the large foundations gave almost twice as much as all other foundations together, but the total was only 11 per cent.

The HUMANITIES claimed 5 per cent of foundation grants. Giving in this area was heaviest from the foundations of intermediate size, which out of their relatively small grants-total of slightly more than $130 million, gave $14 million, while the large foundations, granting nearly $350 million, spared for the HUMANITIES less than $15 million.

International Affairs claimed a little more than 5 per cent, with most of this $33 million—80 per cent—coming from the few large foundations.

Religion received a little less than 5 per cent. In this case the smallest foundations were relatively the heaviest givers, and indeed just about equalled the large foundations in dollar amount of their gifts.

Studies and projects in the field of Government received only minor support from any group, reaching a total of $13.6 million, or 2 per cent.

Finally, the flow of foundation funds needs to be examined, not in a vacuum, but in the context of total philanthropy, and with the recognition that many foundations place special emphasis upon needs and opportunities with low visibility, less able to attract funds from more ample sources.

Uses of This Directory

We hope that this Directory will serve a variety of constructive purposes. For the general student, it presents detailed information on an important aspect of private philanthropy that is almost uniquely American, the philanthropic foundation. For the foundation trustee or executive, it offers a general view of his own special field, information concerning interests and activities of other foundations, and some knowledge of the concentration of grants in certain areas. For the small foundation, unable to afford the time and cost of a published report, it affords one means of meeting the obligation of accountability through making available in at least this public form an accurate, if brief, account of its purposes, limitations, and finances.

In terms of numbers, however, it is clear that most of the users of this volume will be persons and organizations seeking funds. This is wholly proper. Grant applications are the lifeblood of foundations, whose sole purpose is to find good recipients for their money. To supply a bridge for two-way traffic between capable and creative persons who need support and foundations that desire to translate money into advances in knowledge and human welfare is perhaps the most useful service this Directory can perform.

Abuse is also possible, and to some degree, inevitable. A foundation in Detroit submits this complaint:

> Ever since a certain foundation down east published a Directory, we have been literally deluged with requests for money from all over these United States and even some from abroad. We have tried to be courteous in turning down these requests but when they start deluging you by telephone from as far away as 100 to 1500 miles, even in the face of having received a firm written 'no' to their original request, such tactics wears one's patience quite thin. Anything your organization can do in your new Directory to indicate that we do not want any additional solicitations will be appreciated.

The secretary of a relatively small New York foundation writes for his trustees:

> They prefer to be on record as not supplying information concerning the details of their activities. . . . It is simply that this is a small Foundation and > it does not have the personnel to answer various questions. The Trustees prefer to be known as extremely irritable, unapproachable and uncooperative, except to those organizations in which the Foundation is interested.

There is clear evidence that some fund-raisers send mass mailings to foundations, the names of which they have compiled from directories or purchased from commercial list houses, in the apparent hope that if enough approaches are made to so much money, some of it will drop in their laps. Such procedures are inexcusably wasteful, even if the solicitor does sometimes realize more than the costs of his mailing. They are also costly and irritating to all the inappropriate foundations approached.

Fund-raisers need to know that at least the larger foundations do not usually make grants toward the operating budgets of agencies, whether national or local, or for individual need. They have accepted the doctrine that the limited funds of foundations should be used chiefly as the venture capital of philanthropy, to be spent in enterprises requiring risk and foresight, not likely to be supported by government or private individuals. In their fields of special interest they prefer to aid research, designed to push forward the frontiers of knowledge, or pilot demonstrations, resulting in improved procedures apt to be widely copied.

Support for current programs, if it comes at all from foundations, must usually be sought from the smaller organizations, and especially those located in the area of the agency, well acquainted with its personnel and its needs. Most small foundations, and some larger ones, restrict their grants to the local community, or state. Immense variety exists; the interests and limitations of each foundation need to be examined before it is approached.

The pages that follow disclose foundation assets in the United States, together with much information on fields of interest. The total is not impressive against the background of our economy; foundations are able to spend for all purposes only about 8 cents of the annual dollar of private philanthropy. But because they have had long experience in giving and most of them disburse their funds with care, they have built an enviable record of accomplishment from relatively meager resources. It is our hope that The Foundation Directory may prove a useful tool in a still wiser distribution of private wealth for public welfare.

Smithsonian Institution
Washington 25, D.C.

The Smithsonian Institution, created by Act of Congress in 1846, resulted from a bequest of James Smithson, an English scientist, to the United States of America "to found at Washington, under the name of the Smithsonian Institution, an establishment for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men." It is not a foundation within the definitions of this study, though it does not differ greatly from some operating foundations except in being a ward of the government. It maintains a variety of museums, galleries, and special collections and sponsors research, chiefly by its own staff, in its fields of interest. Its statistics are not included in our summaries.

Grants are made to public institutions where public funds may not be available for a specific project of great interest and potential benefit to Cummins Engine Company, Inc. Five different types of scholarship programs are sponsored, including awards for employees and sons and daughters of employees. Contributions to advance the control of diseases and improve health are usually made through local organizations. This Foundation believes in the philosophy of self-help and thus has greatest interest in community organizations which develop a broad base of support. Contributions are also made to causes devoted to the cultural aspects of human life and behavior.

NOTES ON THE SURVEY

Work on this edition of The Foundation Directory began in the summer of 1957. The Center's files then contained records collected over more than four decades by Russell Sage Foundation in its studies of foundations and philanthropy as well as extensive files purchased from American Foundations Information Service together with non-exclusive copyright to materials contained in American Foundations and Their Fields, VII. From these and other sources came a list of some five thousand foundations. In September 1957 each of these was sent the detailed Questionnaire with explanatory notes reproduced on pages 682–685, under cover of a letter outlining the Center's purposes and soliciting cooperation. After six weeks a second appeal for cooperation was circulated to those not heard from, and after another six weeks, a third.

The initial list was rapidly augmented by field staff working in the sixty-five district offices of the Internal Revenue Service. The law provides that portions of federal Information Returns filed by tax-exempt organizations be made available to the public. Pages three and four of Form 990-A (reproduced on pages 686–687) provide basic data. During the progress of the field work these pages of the Form were revised to require more detailed information, specifically Line 25, "Contributions, gifts, grants, etc. received" (See instruction 3) and supporting attachments describing the nature of grants. These changes will facilitate future study but came too late on the whole to aid field work on this edition.

In previous years, photographic copying of these records was permitted, but a new ruling prohibiting such mechanical means of duplication required that data be manually transcribed. The chore of gathering information from the Internal Revenue Service was made even more onerous by the fact that returns from all exempt organizations of whatever type are interfiled, thereby vastly increasing the bulk of materials it was necessary to handle.

Instructions to the field staff called for transcription of all[1] the public portions of the returns together with any supporting attachments, usually more detailed statements showing sources of foundation income and recipients of foundation grants. As returns came in from the field, they were checked against the files, and this operation produced several thousand new names. These were sent the routine first mailing of questionnaire forms and explanatory notes. The files were further increased by gathering additional names from news reports, and leads on new foundations from any source were followed through. As the project progressed, the procedures were altered, and the form letters were used less frequently. Personal letters containing descriptive material about the Center, usually the most recent annual report and a pamphlet outlining the Center's program, were sent along with the forms.

Gathering information about foundations is of course a continuing activity of the Center, and new foundations are added to our records daily. Indeed, foundations receiving tax exemption are averaging about twelve hundred a year according to Internal Revenue Service published lists. But for Directory purposes, a cut-off date had to be set. In general this coincided with the visit of our field staff to the given office of the District Director, usually in 1958. New foundations which filed their first returns after that visit have generally been omitted. But if knowledge came to us of a large new foundation, special efforts were made to collect data by correspondence or sometimes with the appreciated cooperation of persons in foundation or college offices in the area involved.

Present files of the Center include approximately twelve thousand active foundations. Of these, 8,222 received the Questionnaires and follow-up inquiries. Of the remainder, a few fell within excluded categories,[1] a few reached our files too late, but most were too small for directory consideration, having neither $50,000 in assets nor spending in grants or operating program as much as $10,000 in the most recent year of record.

Time did not permit a complete survey of response, but a random sample of one thousand foundations in twenty states indicates that 41 per cent of the foundations responded with useful data, either in the questionnaire forms or in letters. Eleven per cent replied negatively, and the remaining 48 per cent did not respond.

Each descriptive entry in the book, then, represents very serious and often repeated effort to obtain full and up-to-date information. Each was composed from the fullest material available, including the Questionnaire as filled in by the foundation, public records, press reports, and consists wherever possible of name, address, date and location of incorporation (or establishment in the case of trusts), a statement of purpose and activities, financial data including total capital assets (or net worth), preferably at market value, total expenditures including grants, total grants for the most recent year, and, finally, a roster of officers and trustees.

In the absence of returned Questionnaires it was necessary to glean as much as possible from public records, which often were far from explicit. The reader will therefore note certain recurring phrases in the foundation descriptions. Whenever a foundation has itself given as its statement of purpose and activities an almost direct quote from the Internal Revenue Code, Section 501 (c) (3) ". . . organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, testing for public safety, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals . . . ," and no other indication of program, the phrase has been shortened to "Broad philanthropic purposes." When no clear policy is stated nor pattern of giving discernible, and the public records indicate general charitable giving, that precise phrase has been used. When that general giving appears to be entirely local, it is recorded by the phrase, "Local giving." In those cases in which the only available evidence of interest is a listing of grants on the 990-A form, two phrases have been used to indicate time: if the information return is not recent, the phrase "Past grants . . ." indicates no present knowledge of activities; if the information return is relatively recent, this fact is recorded by a date in connection with the financial data and by the phrase "Recent grants. . . ." Where no recent information could be unearthed about current activities, articles of incorporation or charters have been used when they provide a statement of original intentions.

Although we did not obtain cooperation from all the foundations included, each foundation listed had full opportunity to review the entry concerning it. This was submitted, usually in galley proof, mounted on a printed instruction form providing space for editing and up-dating the copy. (See sample of instruction sheet on pages 688–689.) All were informed that unless corrections were received by a stipulated date, the entry would appear in the Directory substantially as submitted. Whenever possible, the precise phraseology given by a foundation has been used.

To all of the cooperating and supporting foundations we express our great appreciation. We are also most grateful to those foundation officers who, persuaded of the importance of this type of public reporting about foundation affairs, did their best to educate the reluctant or downright opposed.

The Directory, published by Russell Sage Foundation for the Center, is priced to cover the costs to the Foundation of its printing and distribution. The costs of preparation have been met from the general budget of the Center, which during this period was supported by grants from Carnegie Corporation of New York and The Ford Foundation. Responsibility for the errors and omissions which will inevitably be found rests primarily upon the named editors. F. Emerson Andrews, Director of the Center, established the original plan, gave general guidance, analyzed the findings, and wrote the interpretive Introduction. Marianna O. Lewis undertook much of the field work, and on return to the office rendered major assistance in preparing material for press and in compiling the classified index. To this Editor fell primary charge of the project, directing staff, handling proofs, and conducting most of the voluminous correspondence.

Other staff members who were of substantial assistance in the Directory work included Patricia K. Alexander, Suzanne H. Baer, Martha K. Branch, MaryVie Cramblitt,[1] Olga I. Fabry, Lucille B. Gibson, Irene R. Hood,[1] Joan LaBette,[1] Katherine T. Massie,[1] Sarah B. McKeige,[1] Ann Patterson Munro,[1] Lee Buff Noe, Jeffrey Nugent,[1] Priscilla Perlmutter,[1] and Patricia Willis.

EXPLANATORY NOTES [to Page 1 of Questionnaire]

The Foundation Library Center was incorporated in 1956 as an educational institution under authority of the Board of Regents of the University of the State of New York. It is an independent agency under its own board of trustees, men knowledgeable about foundations but representing the public interest. With an initial grant from the Carnegie Corporation of New York it is charged with the tasks of gathering comprehensive information about foundations, stimulating adequate reporting where such does not yet exist, and making its collections freely and generally available.

The information from this questionnaire will serve two chief purposes—it will make available within the Center new and comparable information about all foundations, and it will aid in preparation of a directory of foundations which the Center is presently undertaking.

The numbered comments apply to the correspondingly numbered lines in the questionnaire.

3. The name desired is that of the chief executive officer to whom correspondence should ordinarily be addressed.

4. If you are incorporated, check this item. If not incorporated, specify whether testamentary trust, inter vivos trust, community trust, or other.

6. Purpose. Where appropriate, state briefly in words of donor or charter. But where this statement is broad or merely repeats the Internal Revenue statute, please indicate more specific interests and present focus.

7. To discourage useless applications, you may indicate here any specific limitations, whether geographical, or to a specified institution or type of institution, or to particular fields. State any special prohibitions, i.e., "No loans to individuals," that your experience indicates are important.

8. State whether you operate through grants, scholarships, prizes, a service program, your own research, etc.

11. Financial Data.

The data requested may be obtained from the following sections of Form 990-A:

a. Page 4, Line 10 (end of year figure); please translate this figure into market value on the following line.
b. Page 4, Sum of Lines 11 and 12 and comparable items on Line 13 (Do not include unpaid grants, etc.)
c. Page 3, Sum of Lines 19 and 24b.
d. Page 3, Sum of Lines 17, 18, 19, 23, and 24b.
e. Page 3, Line 9.
f. Consists of contributions, gifts, grants, etc., received during the year; we should be glad to have this figure if you are willing to supply it. It is Line 25 on Page 2, which is not presently open to public inspection.

Trusts claiming deduction under Section 642(c) of the Internal Revenue Code may supply the requested data from the following sections of Form 1041-A:

a. Page 2, Line 10.
b. Page 2, Sum of Lines 11 and 12 and comparable items on Line 13. (Do not include unpaid grants, etc.)
c. Page 1, Sum of Lines 19b, 20b, and 22b.
d. Page 1, Sum of Lines 17, 19b, 20b, and 22b.
e. Page 1, Line 9.

12. Please list principal officers and all trustees. If you star the names of officers who are also trustees, these need not be duplicated in the second list.

To avoid carbon smudges, and since items on this page are chiefly matters of checking, it is suggested that this page be filled out by pen or pencil rather than typing.

13. Fields of Interest. No attempt is here made at a completely logical division of all human activity. The criterion has been usefulness in recording foundation activities with some regard to previous systems of categories, so that comparisons may be possible.

First, please check in the box provided each major field (bold face type) in which the foundation has had a substantial interest—interpreted as 10 per cent or more of the year's efforts or expenditures.

Second, please enter an a, b, or c opposite each minor field (in some cases, agency) in which the foundation has had an interest—

a = 25% or more of the annual expenditure
b = 10 to 25% of the annual expenditure
c = less than 10% of the annual expenditure

These designations may be merely approximate; we do not wish to involve you in close decisions between fields or in statistical analysis which would be burdensome. Even your "informed guess" would be helpful. Under Religion, please check items under both Faiths and Fields, if pertinent.

14. If the checks you have made under 13 need interpretation, or if a major change in program is under way, use the space provided.

Great effort has been made to keep this questionnaire as simple as the needed information permits. Nevertheless it will require time and care on your part, and for this cooperation we shall be deeply appreciative. Please return to us the white and blue copies; retain the yellow copy for your files.

GENERAL INSTRUCTIONS

1. An annual statement of gross income, receipts, disbursements, etc., on this form, is required by law of every organization which is exempt from tax as described in section 501 (c) (3) of the Code, excepting only (1) a religious organization; (2) an educational organization if it normally maintains a regular faculty and curriculum and normally has a regularly organized body of pupils or students in attendance at the place where its educational activities are regularly carried on; (3) a charitable organization, or an organization for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, if supported in whole or in part by funds contributed by the United States or any State or political subdivision thereof, or primarily supported by contributions of the general public; (4) or an organization operated, supervised, or controlled by or in connection with a religious organization described in section 501 (c) (3). The law also requires that the information called for on pages 3 and 4 be filed and that such information be made available to the public. The law provides penalties for failure to furnish this information.

2. Attach a detailed statement showing with respect to each piece of property sold: (a) Date acquired and manner of acquisition; (b) Gross sales price; (c) Cost or other basis (value at time of acquisition, if donated); (d) Expense of sale and cost of improvements subsequent to acquisition; (e) Depreciation since acquisition; and (f) Gain or loss—(b) plus (e) minus the sum of (c) and (d).

3. In all cases where line 25, page 1, includes money or property amounting to $100 or more, which was received directly or indirectly from one person, in one or more transactions during the year, itemized schedules showing the total amount received from and the name and address of each such person shall be attached to this return. (The term "person" includes individuals, fiduciaries, partnerships, corporations, associations, and other organizations.)

4. Expenses may be divided between lines 10 through 16, page 1, and lines 18 and 23, page 1, on the basis of accounting records. If such records do not provide for this division, expenses may be divided on any reasonable basis, such as an approximation of the use of a facility or the time spent by an individual.

5. Activities in lines 19 and 24 (b), page 1, should be classified according to purpose in greater detail than merely charitable, educational, religious, or scientific. For example, payments for nursing service, for laboratory construction, for fellowships, or for assistance to indigent families should be so identified.

The detailed list of organizations and individuals to whom payments were made as well as other itemized statements called for on page 1 should be attached to page 2. Attach to page 4, a list showing each class of activity for which disbursements were made with separate total for each.

6. The balance sheets, Schedule A, should agree with the books of account or any differences should be reconciled.

7. In all cases where line 6, Schedule A, includes 10 percent or more of any class of stock of any corporation, attach a list to page 2 showing the name of the corporation, the number of shares of each type of stock owned (including information indicating whether the stock is voting or nonvoting), and the value of the stock as recorded in the books and included in line 6.

8. Signature and verification.—The return must be signed either by the president, vice-president, treasurer, assistant treasurer or chief accounting officer, or other corporate officer (such as tax officer) who is authorized to sign. A receiver, trustee, or assignee must sign any return which he is required to file on behalf of a corporation. The statement at the bottom of page 1 of the return is required to be signed by any person, firm, or corporation who prepared the taxpayer's return. If the return is prepared by a firm or corporation, it should be signed in the name of the firm or corporation. The statement is not required if the return is prepared by a regular, full-time employee.

9. For further information see regulations under sections 6033, 501 (a), and 6104 of the Internal Revenue Code.

Form 990-T.—Section 511 of the Code imposes a tax in case of certain organizations described in sections 401 (a) and 501 (c) (2), (3), (5), and (6), on income derived (a) from operation of a business enterprise which is unrelated to the purpose for which such organization received an exemption or (b) from certain rentals from property leased to others. Such income and tax are to be reported on Form 990-T, copies of which may be obtained from the District Director of Internal Revenue.

Form 1099.—Every organization engaged in a trade or business (which includes for this purpose all exempt functions) making payments in the course of such trade or business of interest, rents, commissions, salaries or wages, or other fixed or determinable income (including allowances for expenses) of amounts of $600 or more during the calendar year shall make returns on Forms 1096 and 1099, except that the making of such return will not be required with respect to the portion of any salary or wage payments reported on Form W-2. (See Rev. Rul. 56-176, CB 1956-1, p. 560.)

THE FOUNDATION LIBRARY CENTER

Attached below is galley proof of the entry for your organization in The Foundation Directory, Edition I, shortly to be published for the Center by Russell Sage Foundation.

Please read it carefully, making any needed corrections. We would appreciate having the financial information brought to date, if a more recent year is now available.

The sample opposite suggests the style of presentation we believe would be most informative; descriptions of small foundations may be somewhat briefer.

If the information for your foundation is inadequate, we urge that you complete it now—both in the public interest and with a view to reducing inappropriate appeals through better public knowledge of your purposes and limitations.

If corrections are not received by the date stamped below, we will publish the entry in substantially the present form.

SAMPLE

Scattergood (John A.) Foundation
35 Excelsior Lane
Golden Rule 2, Michigan

Incorporated in 1902 in Michigan.

Donor: John A. Scattergood.

Purpose and Activities: To promote the well-being of mankind through improving the cultural environment and stimulating self-help. Present grants emphasize education, particularly adult education and experiments in mass communication; the humanities, with stress on the performing arts and one-year writing fellowships; and a program for the exchange of persons, preferably younger artists, between the United States and South America. No grants are made toward the general budgets of educational or welfare institutions, or outside the United States except in the exchange-of-persons program. Report published annually.

Financial Data (year ended 30 June 1958): Assets, $8,765,432 (M); expenditures, $350,617, including $333,086 in grants.

Officers: Andrew A. Allen,* Executive Director; Bernard B. Brown,* Secretary; Catherine C. Clay, Treasurer.

*Trustees: Daniel D. Dabney, Chairman; Ernest E. Exman, Frank F. Find, George G. Gross, Mrs. Harry H. Hall.

EXPLANATORY NOTES

The Foundation Library Center was incorporated in 1956 as an educational institution under authority of the Board of Regents of the University of the State of New York. With an initial grant from Carnegie Corporation of New York, it is charged with the tasks of gathering comprehensive information about foundations, stimulating adequate reporting where such does not yet exist, and making its collections freely and generally available.

The Foundation Directory is a major project of the Center, which has a mandate to include all American philanthropic foundations, except those of minimal size. The Directory will be published for the Center by Russell Sage Foundation.

In correcting your entry, or bringing its information to date, you may find these suggestions helpful:

1. Please check with especial care the spelling of all names, and bring to date the officer and trustee lists.
2. For the financial data, we would prefer assets at market value, marked (M); if this is difficult, the ledger (L) figure will suffice; for most foundations this is the item on Form 990-A, page 4, Line 10—end of year figure.

   The expenditures figure is the sum of Lines 17, 18, 19, 23, and 24b on page 3 of 990-A.

INDEX OF FIELDS OF INTEREST

This subject index includes 993 references compiled from the directory descriptions of purpose and activities of 435 foundations—the larger general research foundations with programs of national significance and most special purpose foundations concerned with precise fields of activity. To make the Index as useful and manageable as possible, the following types of foundations have not, in general, been indexed: family foundations concerned with local or personal giving, such as church or alma mater; company-sponsored foundations mainly limiting their grants to specific geographical areas; and community foundations which characteristically make grants to local institutions or for purposes specified by the donors. A number of see and see also references are included to guide the user to related fields.

Readers concerned with foundations in their community or state should review all the entries in the appropriate chapter, since many foundations have not reported any purposes or interests whereas others have indicated general giving with a wide range of interests, broad purposes with no specified fields, or geographical limitations, and therefore are excluded from the Index.

In subject references the letter following the page number denotes the position of the foundation on the page; e.g. 270*b* indicates the second entry on page 270.

INDEX OF PERSONS

This section lists alphabetically all officers and members of governing boards (whether known as trustees, directors, members, distribution committees, foundation committees, or by still other titles) who appear in the Directory section. The letter following the page number identifies the particular foundation under which the name appears: e.g., Smith, 420*a* would appear under the first foundation on page 420; Smith, 420*b*, under the second foundation; Smith 420*h*, under the eighth foundation, and if the entry for that foundation ran over to the next page, Mr. Smith's name might be on page 421.
